FAULKNER QUORUM COURT TO MEET SOON

CONWAY, Ark., Dec. 8 (Sp.)—Much interest is attached to the meeting here on Dec. 15 of a special session of county judges court, called by County Judge J. A. Lea to remove the county's present condition, which is a deadlock with no funds for public work of any nature. Judge Lea has issued a legal call for the court, but at the same time says he will not promise to expend for farm demonstration and tick eradication funds which the court may set aside for that purpose. It was on this question that the regular court session, Oct. 10, ended in a deadlock and tied up all county funds.

If a majority of the justices of the peace completing its membership under the promise as they did before, the same result may issue from the session. The justices in 1918 allowed the fund and then had their will broken when Judge Lea refused to allow the funds to be appropriated. This time, it is believed a majority of them will favor some method of assuring support of the two federal undertakings by county funds, regardless of Judge Lea's stubborn opposition.

Mary Garden And Gown Of Mirrors Please Big Crowd

BY GEORGE WILLIAMSON.

Mary Garden, and her "Gown of a thousand mirrors" made her Memphis debut Monday evening at the Lyric. The star amid scenes of social elegance and display that must have given her keen satisfaction at being the center of attraction. The capacity of the house was taxed and the audience was representative of the city's best, including many from the cities and towns of the contiguous territory. It was a fine outpouring of people, and apparently they were pleased with the concert. Enthusiasm did not run quite so mad as is sometimes seen when artists appear here, but this famous soprano has no good reason for thinking that Memphis did not enjoy having her make her initial concert appearance of the season of 1931-32 here.

Joseph and Angelo Cortese, under whose auspices Miss Garden came, who are adding so much to the musical life of the city, made wise choice when they selected her, for so much had been heard of her talent and attractions that many folks had been curious to see and hear for themselves. It is questionable whether more were there to see or merely to hear, but no occasion was given for either element leaving disappointed. That the plaudits of the public in other parts of the country are justified was the common view, whether because of her personal charm or attractions or for sake of her art. She perhaps would never have won the place she occupies from vocal talents alone, yet they are many a well-defined sing with wonderful finish and pleasing effect and her knowledge of interpretation and effects is superb. Her numbers were admirably chosen, and here again she displayed intelligence as to what she could do well and with pleasing results from the standpoint of her listeners.

Opening her program with an air from the second act of "Carmen" by Bizet, she quickly found her audience responsive, but it was when she gave us the "Carmen" song, "Carmen," that she aroused them to the height of enthusiasm which did not subside until her last note was sung. What a Carmen she must make, and small wonder it is that she never sings the role except in a filled house. Her remarkable histrionic talents must get full play in this role of the gypsy girl and in her brief number Monday evening she showed the taste of her auditors for more.

Of the French group, in which she seemed more at home than in other perhaps because most of her operatic work has been in that school, she proved very pleasing, but it was in the last number, "L'Air de l'Opéra," with a very rumber violoncello obbligato by Mr. Pollak, that she rose to dramatic loftiness, indicating talents that are rare. As an encore she gave "Comin' Through the Rye," in a most seductive and pleasing manner.

The Scotch group, headed by beautiful "Annie Laurie," also keenly appealed to her listeners, for in them she showed a depth of feeling that reflected phases beneath the froth and foam of her vivacious nature. Another encore was given graciously, "The Sweetest Flower That Grows." Miss Garden's first success in her rendition of the air from "Loulou" by Charpentier, which was a fitting climax to her program, although it failed to arouse the interest that some of the lighter ones had done. She is first of all an actress, then a singer and over all a woman who charms and arouses the admiration of those before her. As companion artists Miss Garden chose well, especially in having Fernand Pollak with his violoncello. He is a superb player, with excellent command of this beautiful instrument. He has a rich, full tone and a technique which made his number keenly received and appreciated. Of especial note was his own composition "Three Fancies" with three distinct movements, but through them all a wild romantic strain suggestive of the dance music of the 19th life of Southeastern Europe. He was also effective in his obligato.

As accompanist Emil J. Pollak was also efficient and satisfying, although in his entrances and exits he suggested that he might also prove an excellent personage for bucking the line in a football game.
